

Normal spiral galaxy with an inactive supermassive black hole in the nucleus.

A galaxy with a bright active galactic nucleus (AGN) produced by accretion of matter by the supermassive black hole.

A quasar, with an AGN that is so bright that it drowns out the light from the host galaxy.